For the past few days cotton has been quoted on the Anderson market at 3 to 71-4 cents. While this is an advance over prices prevailing before Christmas, practically none of the staple is being offered for sale. Bestaple is being offered for sale. Before Christmas cotton wagons were a common sight on the streets, but since that time none have been seen. Those persons disposing of their cotton before Christmas were probably pressed for a little money for Christmas, and with that time passed they are swinging on to what they have got and are waiting for higher prices.
